After peer review, HEDN authors whose work has been accepted will pay an article processing charge (APC), have a choice of license options, and retain copyright to their published work.

HEDN is a peer-reviewed journal that focuses on gathering academic and clinical knowledge from around the world with regard to disaster nursing. It aims to provide the latest information in physiological, psychological, social, and historical responses of individuals, families, communities, and nations in a variety of disaster environments; and to disseminate evidence on health emergencies and disaster nursing to local, regional, national, and international audiences. We encourage advanced scholars, those at early stages of their professional careers, and students to publish in this academic journal.
